דבר תורה

Parshat Emor contains various laws regarding the kohanim, the holidays, and other aspects of Jewish life. One interesting point in this parsha is the emphasis on the concept of perfection or completeness in offerings to God. For example, it states that an animal offered as a sacrifice must be "tamim," meaning whole or unblemished. This concept of perfection can be understood in a broader sense beyond just physical blemishes. It can also symbolize the idea of being wholehearted and sincere in our service to God. Just as the offerings were to be without physical defect, our actions and intentions should be pure and without ulterior motives when we serve God. Furthermore, the idea of completeness can remind us of the importance of fulfilling our obligations and commitments in their entirety. Just as the offerings were required to be complete, so too should we strive to fulfill our responsibilities and promises completely and faithfully.

In our lives, we should strive to emulate the completeness and sincerity found in the offerings described in Parshat Emor. By doing so, we can enhance our connection to God and lead more fulfilling and meaningful lives.

Once, a man came to the Rebbe with a desperate request to save his failing business from bankruptcy. The Rebbe surprised him by asking, "Do you have a mezuzah on the door of your office?" The man, expecting a miraculous solution, admitted he did not. The Rebbe explained the mezuzah's significance, how it symbolizes God's protection and blessings.

Inspired, the man promptly affixed a mezuzah to his office door. Soon, his business turned around dramatically.

When he thanked the Rebbe for the advice, the Rebbe humbly replied, "It was not my advice but your action in fulfilling the mitzvah of mezuzah that opened you to God's blessings."
